

A Letter to the Editor

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing to draw readers' attention to schoolyard bullies that move to cyberspace and the case on a 13-year-old girl who killed herself after family's fake cyber-friendship turned nasty. I am shocked as no one should bully other people in a social network and think it is funny.

As far as I know, schoolyard bullying and cyber bullying are very serious. The bullies don't even see the harm they are causing to the victims. They don't think that they are doing anything wrong because they think they are just having fun. How can they think they are just having fun? They shouldn't make fun of other people and their emotions.

I haven't been a culprit or a victim of bullying cases but I have been a bystander. One of my friends has been the victim of cyber bullying on Internet. Someone made a face account of my friend a few months ago. She has been bullied by an unknown person. But my friend is not like the people in the articles. She is brave and will not commit suicide because of these stupid comments. She just ignores them and does not take them that serious.

I only suggest that people shouldn't take the actions made by bullies too serious and they should just ignore them. The victims should just cool down and don't try to attempt suicide because suicide is not a way to get rid of the bullies.

I hope that the victims will not commit suicide and they should ignore the bullies.

Yours faithfully,

Babita
