Amazing Village

Once upon a time, there was an amazing village which was far away from the city.

There were different kinds of animals living in the village. One day, a rabbit ran to the head of the village which was a monk. The rabbit asked the monkey, “will the coming winter be cold?” Because the monkey did not know, so he just told the rabbit to keep more branches. The rabbit took the monkey’s advice. Then the monkey made a phone call to the city observatory and asked about the weather. The officer who worked for the observatory said, “The winter may be cold,” afterwards, the monkey announced to all the animals to keep more branches. Every week the monkey made a phone call to the observatory for the winter’s weather. He just did the same thing week after week. At last, he asked the observatory again the same question. The worker said “I’m sure that the winter will be very freezing.” The monkey asked, “why are you so certain about that?” The officer said, “Because I can see all the villagers in our village has already kept a lot of branches.”
