

During the summer holiday, I applied for a job to work as an assistant to a famous cartoon artist. Finally, I made it! I was so excited to work with technical experts and artists.

My boss looked very fierce at first. On the contrary, he was a very nice person and a dedicated member of staff. Even though we encountered a lot of difficulties, we solved it one by one together patiently. I learned that work life is very different from school life and much more difficult than I expected, but I did enjoy the experience.

My boss, William, was going to publish an English cartoon, but he was weak in English. Therefore, I would be a translator mostly. Actually, my English was not that good. I tried my best to look up words in a dictionary. I never did it before but I found it interesting! It was also a good way to learn English besides studying in a school. The most challenging work was about the publishing of cartoons. We had to search around overseas cartoon companies. And I needed to interview those companies which had accepted our application. We had to communicate with them in English.

This job helped me to make big improvement in my English in general and communication skills in particular. This job changed my views in English. It became a source of motivation for me to learn English harder. English is important in all over the world!
